Bashir Rahemtulla
Managing Director, Intelysis Corp.

With the explosion of the Internet age, information is accessible to almost anyone that is willing to spend time to look. This has also put public record information at the fingertips of researchers and investigators from the comfort of their own office.

In this one-day workshop, we will explore various aspects of public record research that can be conducted online including public, government, and proprietary databases. The workshop will guide you through with an introduction to online research, its current trends, which databases are most useful and find out which Internet sites contain helpful information and which ones do not. Several case studies will be used for hands on interactive exercise to help put the theory into action.

Bashir Rahemtulla

Bashir is the Managing Director of Intelysis Corp. and pioneered the use of on-line database research in the early '90s for investigative purposes, resulting in the delivery of cost-effective and efficient services. Since the Internet explosion, Bashir has been instrumental in sifting through sites that are useful for investigative research purposes.

Bashir has been involved in many significant investigations, particularly related to fraud and internal operations. His extensive experience includes extensive involvement with the Ontario Ministry of Health and Long Term Care, where he assessed the internal systems and controls to determine exposure to fraud and identify the most effective procedures to deter user and provider fraud. He has also been involved in working with the Ministry on a number of forensic accounting assignments.

Bashir has made numerous presentations at seminars and courses on background research and investigations. He has also taught accounting and auditing techniques to the insurance and brokerage industry and has been featured in an article in Human Resources Professional magazine on innovative methods for screening potential employees.

Bashir's knowledge of on-line database research around the world is virtually unmatched. Combined with his network of international contacts, this capability allows Intelysis to conduct global investigations with relative ease and expediency.

Dave Chu

Senior Research Investigator, Intelysis Corp.

Dave is the Senior Research Investigator of Intelysis Corp. and is in-charge of its extensive library of databases. Dave's skills with current databases and his constant search for new ones play an integral part in the maintenance of Intelysis' advanced research capabilities.

Since joining the company in 2001, Dave has been heavily involved in all aspects of investigations. These include fraud, competitive intelligence, due diligence, asset tracing, and international executive screening files. His unique ability to manipulate search methods along with his knack for information retrieval has placed him as one of the top research investigator in the industry. His extensive experience in security management also assists clients in performing security risk audits and assessments.
